

“Introduction to Intergenerational Programs”

STARTING SEPTEMBER 2011

An on-line course presented through the Generations Together Intergenerational Studies Institute and the School of Social Work Continuing Education Program

Overview

This course is an on-line, interactive experience based on the 13-year success of Generations Together Intergenerational Training Institute at the University of Pittsburgh. The course is designed to help you develop skills needed for success in the intergenerational field. Students read course materials, do on-line assignments, discuss the content with fellow students and instructors, and follow step-by-step procedures to complete the individual units.

What Are Intergenerational Programs?

"Intergenerational programs are planned and on going activities that purposefully bring together different generations to share experiences that are mutually beneficial. Typically the programs involve interactions between the young and the old."

-- National Council on Aging (NCOA)

Why Are They Important?

- Intergenerational programs mirror the way the world is. Knowing how various generations relate to each other is an essential component of cultural and social understanding.
- Intergenerational programs reflect the dynamics and interactions of generations in communities and families.
- Intergenerational programs address some fundamental issues in community revitalization, family relationships, and understanding of how people of different generations interact and positively affect each other.
- Intergenerational programs are appropriate for study in multiple disciplines, such as gerontology, human/community development, education, communication, sociology, and public policy --disciplines that focus on understanding human interaction and the value of treating all generations with mutual respect and dignity.
- The study of intergenerational programs is attracting interest in many countries across the world as we address social, demographic and economic changes from a global perspective.

Who is this course for?

This course is for professionals, practitioners, administrators, teachers and faculty, program developers, policy makers, and researchers who are concerned with how cross generational dynamics contribute to mutual understanding and the development of positive and meaningful roles of all generations in society.
